12:00h Exam classes: finding the balance

Many teachers are tasked with preparing their students for external exams. The development of skills and strategies as well as exam practice are key, but we can't forget that a successful student is an engaged one. The 21st century student can be a notoriously difficult customer to satisfy: they spend a lot of time online, like to multitask and are avid consumers of video: can we cater for this in our lessons? This session will demonstrate ideas that our students will love, while at the same time developing the skills they need to succeed.

13:00h Making a difference - short and simple activities to keep our young learners involved and engaged.

Warmers, coolers, fillers, five minute games and activities - whatever name we want to give them - can really make a difference when it comes to giving our lessons a certain shape. We'll be looking at the ingredients that make short activities successful and reflecting on how we can keep our young learners engaged with minimum resources without being dependent on a course book.

15:30h Learning to listen: A B C (mejorar listening en general)

Listening is often perceived as one of the hardest parts of exams by Spanish candidates, and results sometimes reflect this. Today's session looks at how to build up Listening Skills from early stages and to be careful of the "just listen" approach in which any type of listening is considered to be sufficient. Listening in the classroom and Listening for homework need to be combined in an enjoyable and controlled way if candidates are to progress.

16:30h It's all about you

Without the use of course book material, this workshop will allow participants to think about the use of personalization activities and its benefits not only to individual students but also to help develop self-esteem and group dynamics. Everyone will be asked to participate as students and to reflect on what the students might be feeling.
